Leadership for Inclusive Growth: Concept, Process and Transformation

India is on an accelerated path of economic growth. Manufacturing, agricultural and services sector are experiencing unprecedented growth in the last few years. Every attempt is being made by policy makers to connect India economically to the global system. The economic transformation of India needs to address issues related to the differential growth rate between the urban and the rural. Efforts and initiatives are necessary to bridge this gap. Operationally this would mean the corporate sector in India should continue to perform exceptionally well. The service sector should constantly aim to remain an attractive source of cost advantage for multi-nationals. There is a need to broad base employment opportunity, purchasing power, improve governance, ensure transparency and accountability in various walks of both private and public life to bridge this gap.

The transformation needed is significant. The efforts and resources require to transform India as the most livable place is enormous. While the Indian talent pool is considered to be world class, there is an acute shortage of leaders both in the corporate and social sectors.

We need to encourage and help young men and women to evolve as outstanding leaders to enable India to be transformed as the most developed nation in the world.

Management Research Foundation in collaboration with School of Management, D G Vaishnav College, Arumbakkam, Chennai is pleased to announce a one day seminar on Leadership on Feb. 29, 2008 in the D G Vaishnav College Auditorium.
